The Picasso Museum - Château Grimaldi

In 1946, at the proposal of the prestigious Château Grimaldi's custodian, Pablo Picasso accepted the offer to set up his studio in one of the castle's rooms. He painted there for six months, leaving almost all of his creations during that time to the museum. This gave rise to the first museum dedicated to the artist in his lifetime, with the only condition being that none of the works were ever to leave the premises. One of the rooms in the Château Grimaldi is dedicated to Nicolas de Staël. Numerous contemporary works from Léger, Atlan, Magnelli, Ernst, Picabia, Modigliani, Pagès and Hans Hartung were added to enhance the museum's collection.

Fort Carré

Located on the Saint-Roch Peninsula, Fort Carré is built on a rock rising 26 meters above sea level. It offers a 43 m round path and offers a 360-degree view.

This remarkable architectural ensemble, which was significantly improved by Vauban, served for a long time as a sentinel for the nearby frontier with the then hostile County of Nice, as well as a defence post for Antibes, the last French port before reaching this border. The Fort is surrounded by a 4-hectare protected nature reserve containing typically Mediterranean flora and fauna.
